WAGON-MASTERS AND OTHERS,

In Charge of Trains of

WILL BE GOVERNED BY THE FOLLOWING

RULES AND REGULATIONS.

1st. Swearing, gambling and intemperance will not be allowed in camp or on the Plains.

2d. The men are subject to the full control and orders of the Wagon-Master in charge, who has power to discharge men for violation of rules or failure of duty; furnishing each man discharged with a note stating the cause of his discharge and statement of his account in the Train-Book.

3d. In transferring men from one train to another, make a transfer also of accounts to train-book of such trains as they may join; but such transfer of men shall not take place unless actually necessary for the furtherance of the trains.

4th. Keep no accounts in the Train-Book when men trade with each other, as it produces confusion in their accounts at this office.

5th. If, from any cause, there be reason to suspect a man of running off, his outfit will be kept from him until his services are sufficient to pay for the same.

6th. The death of men, and the cause thereof, shall be entered in the Train-Book, at the proper date, and reported at the first station, and also to this office, by letter.

7th. The outfits of men discharged for bad conduct shall be retained in the keeping of wagon-masters.

8th. No outfit of goods will be furnished men before the time of starting for the Plains.

9th. Wagon-Masters will be registered at time of entering service, and the rate of wages in camp and on the Plains set down, and the same transferred to their train-book at starting.

10th. They and the authorized agents on the road only shall have access to the train-books; no one else shall write or mark in the same.

11th. Wagon-masters are not permitted to dispose of any cattle or other property; but, in case any cattle become unfit to continue the journey, they are authorized to leave them with some responsible party, taking their receipt for the same (for which blanks are furnished you), and also a duplicate receipt in train-book, under its proper head.

12th. Upon starting, they will be charged with the cattle, wagons, yokes, chains, and all other property in their trains; and, upon their return, they will be required to account for the same.

13th. They shall take a receipt for all property delivered on the road and at their destination, and report the same to this office, retaining a copy in the train-book.

14th. They shall keep in the train-book a regular list of cattle that may die, get lost, be ranched or left, and report the same to this office.

15th. They shall keep in the train-book, in the proper place, an account of all orders given, stating the amount and for what purpose. They shall also keep a true account of all train expenses.

16th. They are allowed to make purchases for the men, on our account, at only, and they must see that they are properly entered on each man's account in the train-book.

17th. Full rations are furnished each train, with which it is expected the trip will be made. Should additional purchases be made on the road, they will be charged pro rata to the entire camp, unless it should be satisfactorily shown the deficiency was occasioned by unavoidable detention.

18th. Wagon-masters should make themselves familiar with the train-book, and all these rules, regulations and instructions, by frequently reading the same. They should, also, make the men fully acquainted with the rules relating to them.

19th. Assistants are subject to the same rules and instructions that govern wagon-masters, in their relative places.

INSTRUCTIONS

WAGON-MASTERS,

AND ALL EMPLOYEES CONNECTED FOR TRANSPORTING TRAINS.

1st. Commence with first wagon, and corral half the wagons on the right-hand side the ground selected.

2d. Stop the middle wagon of the train directly opposite, and not less than twenty to twenty-five feet from the first wagon, and corral opposite. This will make a wide gap, which is very necessary. The wagon master should be on his feet during corraling.

3d. As it requires three men to corral a wagon, you must select an experienced hand to drive your lead team, so that, when he stops, he can assist the next teamsters, he being on one side, the wagon-master on the other, and the teamster with his lead cattle, to prevent them tangling with the team ahead. He can assist until he is released by the assistant, who must be on foot.

4th. When about coralling, caution your men against exciting the cattle, by hallooing and cracking whips at them. They should be so careful that a long, deep-toned "whoa" would stop their teams in the exact spot required.

5th. Teamsters should not commence to unyoke till their side of the corral is completed, and then they will begin with the leaders and continue down to the wheelers, always loosing the chain and yoke from those yoked.

6th. If water be near the camp, let the cattle feed to it instead of being driven there; but if necessary to drive them, let them linger some time about the water, so that they all may become cool and have a chance to satisfy their thirst.

7th. See that the cattle get on the best feeding ground in the vicinity of the camp, and also that, when turned out, they have a sufficient guard by day and night, and never to be left without a guard.

8th. In driving cattle to corral, men enough must be employed to encircle them and drive them directly in; and, when at a distance from camp, drive them very slowly, as fast driving injures them greatly.

9th. No man should begin yoking before the cattle have had two or three minutes to become quieted in; then all should enter and yoke in a quiet, gentle manner. First, yoke the wheelers, and chain them to the front wheels outside the corral, or hitch them to the tongue; secondly, yoke the leaders and fasten them to the wagon on the inside, then the yoke next the leaders, and so on till the whole team is yoked and hitched up, when they will be taken out of the corral and hitched to the wagon.

10th. While yoking, a man must be in the front gap, and two or three in the hind one. If not required at the gaps, the wagon-master must be instructing the teamsters how to yoke with the greatest facility.

11th. After leaving corral, do not travel more than one-half to one mile before stopping eight or ten minutes for the cattle to breathe and urinate, particularly if the weather be warm and the cattle very full. When you have selected a capable hand to lead the train, always keep him as a leader; and if all the teamsters keep the places they had when starting, they soon learn in what way to manage their teams, and the teams soon learn the art of corraling.

12th. When traveling or corraling, every man must keep a strict observance to the password, so that, if any accident occur in the train, the whole train may be notified at once, and all assistance rendered that is necessary.

13th. Drive the oxen into the corral in the morning as soon as the teamsters can see to yoke, and travel till about 10 o'clock, a. m., varying an hour, more or less, according to camping ground. Remain in camp two or three hours, and then make the evening drive. These rules are for conducting a loaded train.

14th. The same rules may be observed in an empty train, in regard to hitching up as early as you can see; but in this case travel until 7 or 9 o'clock, a. m., according to the time of getting off. As a general thing, an empty train should not travel more than from six to eight miles, and a loaded train from seven to ten, according to camping ground. The hands should cook and eat in such time as to enable the train to hitch up again in an hour and a half to two hours, when you will make another drive of from six to eight miles, and then remain in camp three or four hours, as this is the warm part of the day, and this will give animals and men a chance to rest; then hitch up, always taking your stout-est cattle for the teams, and make an evening drive, which will sometimes throw you a little after dark in coming to camp. When arrived, turn out your cattle, put out your guard, and let the rest of the hands go to bed. This will give hands two meals a day, which is sufficient for men on the Plains, as they eat hearty and have strong diet.

15th. Before starting, see that the lock-chains are properly wrapped, so as to prevent cutting the spokes; and to keep them so during the whole trip, you should provide yourself with suitable gunny sacks before starting.

16th. Keep your wagons well greased, as a failure in this often ruins boxes; also, once a week, if not oftener, have a little grease put in the hook of each oxchain, in the goose neck of the tongue, and in the yoke staples which have rings.

17th. Do not allow the men to whip their teams at all. The use of profane language is strictly forbidden. We expect our trains to observe the Sabbath, and whenever an opportunity occurs to hear preaching, embrace it. We want our men to pay due respect to all persons they meet on the road, whether Indians or Whites, as many difficulties often occur from abuse and insult offered to inoffensive people.

18th. The wagon-master must see that all his orders are obeyed promptly, and exactly as given; if this be the case, he will be respected. And it is our wish that he should see that the hands cultivate a feeling of self-respect and friendship, that nothing but the kindest feelings may exist among them. This is necessary for the well-being of every body of men associated together promiscuously, as they are with trains on the Plains.

19th. You will see by these rules that loaded trains ought to travel from fifteen to eighteen miles per day, the weather being ordinarily good, this being done in two drives, as heretofore written; and returning trains should travel from eighteen to twenty-one miles per day, in ordinary good weather, this being done in three drives, as heretofore stated.

20th. We will add that the statements made above are facts that have come under our personal observation during an experience of several years on the Plains; and we know them to be of indispensable importance, and that they must be strictly obeyed in order to follow the Plains with any success.

We, the undersigned, Wagon-Masters, Assistants, and Teamsters, in the employ of M. M. Payne agree, that we will faithfully perform all the duties incumbent upon us, as good Teamsters, and that we will ~~not use profane language~~, get drunk, gamble, or be cruel to animals.

We also agree, that in case we, or any one of us, should quit the employ of said M. M. Payne of our own accord, and without their consent, or the consent of their agent, or do anything in violation of any one of the above agreements, that we will forfeit our wages and hold ourselves liable to be discharged, said M. M. Payne agreeing to make no charge for our board, which is to be allowed for our services up to the time of quitting

Said wages are to be fifty DOLLARS per month for Teamsters.....
DOLLARS per month for the Assistants; and DOLLARS per month for the Wagon-Master, if he makes a good trip.
